

Filmbase/RTÉ Short Film Awards 2010

ABOUT THE AWARD

The Filmbase/RTÉ Short Film Awards scheme is the longest running short film award scheme for filmmakers in Ireland. In 2010 the awards will provide funding for four short films a year.

These awards are aimed at uncovering new talent and encouraging a fresh approach to filmmaking. They also act as a training ground for directors in the early stages of their careers. Over the last two decades numerous films have been made under the scheme, many of which have screened and won awards at film festivals both nationally and internationally. Previous filmmakers who began by directing Filmbase shorts and have since gone on to direct features include Kirsten Sheridan, John Moore, PJ Dillon and Graham Cantwell. Tamara Anghie, producer of this year's Oscar®-nominated live action short film New Boy, also received her first producer's credit on the Filmbase/RTÉ funded short A Dublin Story.

Applications are initially assessed on the basis of anonymous scripts, this is to ensure that the awards provide an equal chance to all. In each round a shortlist of approximately ten projects is drawn up. Applicants are then asked to put together a production package and bring together a team for interview. Following the interviews up to two successful applicants will be offered an award. With two rounds per year this will lead to up to four new films being produced through the scheme in 2010.

Applicants intending to apply for this award scheme should read the following guidelines carefully. Any queries not covered in these guidelines can be forwarded by email to clare@filmbase.ie.
